STUDENTS RESIST DIVISION BY C.I.A.

Group That Got Funds From Agency Pays No Rent

WASHINGTON, June 24—Members of the National Student Association said today that they were resisting efforts by the Central Intelligence Agency to force the association from its 101-103 Broadway headquarters here.

The association, the country's largest college students organization, for the last two years has occupied a four-story building at 101-103 Street Northwest under a 15-year rent-free lease with the Independence Foundation of Boston.

The foundation has been revealed as one of several that secretly channeled Central Intelligence Agency funds to the National Student Association from the early nineteen-fifties until last year.

Officers of the association denounced the aid last February and announced that all ties with the Federal Agency had been ended.

Called Airrights Contract

The association president, William Groves, said that negotiations for the association were continuing with the C.I.A. over an agency's request that the building be vacated.

He said the association regarded the 15-year rent-free lease as a grant made to it under "an outright legal contract."

"We are not about to give up on a grant given to us two years ago," he remarked.

In the negotiations now under way, he reported, the association is exploring the possibility of ownership of the building with a lease table wine. But being transferred either to lunch for an average red wine I think it to some other entity—perhaps it is a happy way to drink.

Town Keeps Tradition Of Ties for Main Office

MAYBEE, Mich. (AP)—Maybee made up its mind with the annual order in decision.

In the campaign for president of the village 30 miles south of Detroit, some residents liked Carl Rupp. Others liked John Broom. The vote: Rupp 42, Broom 42.

But that is the way it goes in Maybee.

It was Mr. Broom vs. Mr. Rupp in 1961. Mr. Broom vs. Mr. Rupp in 1962. In fact, it has been Mr. Broom vs. Mr. Rupp for the last seven elections, all nonpartisan, with Mr. Rupp winning by two votes in one year, Mr. Broom by two in another.

In this year's election, Mr. Rupp won by two votes again on the first count, but a recount produced a tie. The winner, Mr. Rupp, got the post by picking the winning slip from a hat.

and free from any conceivable ties with the agency."

A C.I.A. spokesman said the agency had no comment on the matter.

Wine Expert in Australia Toasts 'Red on the Rocks'

SYDNEY, Australia (AP)—Thomas Hardy, an Australian wine expert, says the favorite drink at his home is "red on the rocks."

"Some wine snobs would say it was ascriptious to drink wine with ice," said Mr. Hardy, president of the Australian Wine and Brandy Producers' Association, to a group of newsmen.

"I wouldn't, of course, do it if ownership of the building with a lease table wine. But being transferred either to lunch for an average red wine I think it to some other entity—perhaps it is a happy way to drink."
